

“Teachers want to negotiate a fair deal at the bargaining table.”

Global News Saskatchewan: Teacher Strikes

When teachers say they “want to negotiate a fair deal at the bargaining table,” they’re calling out a system that expects care workers often women to quietly accept worsening conditions. Their refusal exposes how power relies on obedience and silence to maintain the status quo. By standing together and demanding fairness, teachers disrupt the norms that devalue their labour and show how collective action becomes a necessary form of resistance.
